

Writing Fellows Program – Spring 2023

The UGS Writing Fellows program will support and train advanced doctoral students who commit two semesters to serve as graduate writing facilitators in their programs. The selected fellows will receive specialized training from the FIU Writing Across Curriculum (WAC) program on how to facilitate a writing group, identify different genres of writing in their specific discipline, and coach students around writing conventions in the discipline. By participating in this role, students will gain experience in leading a group, strengthen their own writing and self-editing skills and add to their professional skill toolkit.

The fellows will receive $1,250 per semester. Two consecutive semester commitment is required.

- Participate in a 2-day training provided by the WAC Program. Topics will include learning to identify and navigate genres of writing in your discipline, to apply self-editing strategies, to respond effectively to various disciplinary rhetorical contexts of writing, and learning to facilitate a group (including establishing writing goals, encouraging constructive peer feedback and keeping groups on track)
- In collaboration with the graduate program director, identify writing needs within the department (e.g., writing comprehensive exams, dissertation proposals, external grant proposals and articles for submission)
- Advertise and recruit doctoral students in your program for the group
- Convene regular writing group meetings over 2 consecutive semesters
- Attend monthly training sessions hosted by WAC and stay in contact with WAC representatives in regard to pedagogical questions or concerns
